Market Context

Global equities advanced quarter to date though leadership was narrow. Strong earnings linked to artificial intelligence and related capital spending offset a sharp rise in bond yields, higher oil prices, and renewed geopolitical risk. Developed markets were led by the US and Japan, while Emerging Markets returns were more mixed, with dispersion across Asia particularly pronounced. The quarter was defined by resilient activity and firmer inflation. In the US, the flash September composite PMI rose to its highest level since mid-2021, while August headline inflation held at 3.4% year on year. In the euro area, the flash September composite PMI also rose, and August inflation accelerated to 3.3%, led by Energy. Against that backdrop, the Federal Reserve, European Central Bank, and Bank of Japan all raised rates in September, reinforcing a higher-for-longer policy message.

Portfolio Review

For the three months ending 30 September 2026, the fund underperformed the MSCI ACWI Value benchmark. The portfolio's security selection drove underperformance, while sector allocation was moderately accretive. Our tilts in Communication Services (overweight) and Utilities (underweight) sectors compared to the MSCI ACWI Value contributed positively to relative performance. Positive security selection contributions in Consumer Discretionary and Energy were overshadowed by negative contributions in Information Technology and Communication Services. On a regional basis, security selection in the US and Emerging Markets contributed negatively while Europe ex. UK contributed positively against the MSCI ACWI Value.

The fund was in line with the broad market MSCI ACWI benchmark over the quarter. The positive contribution from security selection was offset by negative contribution from allocation relative to the MSCI ACWI. Security selection in Health Care and Energy sectors were the top positive contributors, while Information Technology and Communication Services were the largest detractors this quarter. On a regional basis, positive security selection in Europe ex-UK was counterbalanced by negative security selection in the United States.
