In September, the Fund's main contributors to performance relative to the Benchmark included Health Care (significant overweight and stock selection in biotechnology). Detractors from performance relative to the Benchmark included Industrials (stock selection in electrical equipment and machinery) and Financials (significant underweight).

In the third quarter, the Fund's main contributors to performance relative to the Benchmark included Information Technology (stock selection in semiconductors & semiconductor equipment and technology hardware storage & peripherals), Health Care (significant overweight) and Consumer Discretionary (underweight and stock selection in automobiles, broadline retail and household durables). Main detractors from performance relative to the Benchmark included Industrials (significant overweight and stock selection in electrical equipment and machinery), Financials (significant underweight) and Energy (underweight). The Fund's underweight exposure to domestic China A-Shares and US-listed Chinese companies contributed to performance relative to the Benchmark, whereas the Fund's underweight exposure to Chinese companies listed in Hong Kong detracted from performance relative to the Benchmark.

2026 YTD, the Fund's main contributors to performance relative to the Benchmark included Information Technology (significant overweight and stock selection in electronic equipment instruments & components and technology hardware storage & peripherals), Consumer Discretionary (underweight and stock selection in automobile components, automobiles and household durables) and Health Care (significant overweight). Main detractors from performance relative to the Benchmark included Financials (significant underweight and stock selection in banks and insurance), Industrials (stock selection in machinery and electrical equipment) and Energy (underweight). The Fund's underweight exposure to domestic China A-Shares contributed to performance relative to the Benchmark, whereas the Fund's underweight exposure to Chinese companies listed in Hong Kong and overweight exposure to US-listed Chinese companies detracted from performance relative to the Benchmark.

Market Context

China equities were volatile in July, as early-month support from improving earnings prospects, a measured People's Bank of China (PBoC) easing stance, and offshore RMB (CNH) support measures in Hong Kong was offset by disappointing Q2 GDP, credit, and PMI data. Onshore China A-shares lagged, weighed down by a correction in domestic cyclicals and remained under pressure into month-end, even as policy rhetoric turned more supportive following the Politburo meeting and state-linked funds remained active ETF buyers. Offshore Hong Kong markets outperformed for the month, with global investors rotating capital from crowded chip-related names in South Korea and Taiwan and redeploying proceeds to Chinese internet and AI software.

China equities diverged in August, as onshore A-shares showed resilience and posted modest monthly gains amid heightened volatility. Sentiment improved following the People's Bank of China's Q2 report, which signaled a more accommodative policy stance, while regulators introduced targeted measures to support consumption and provide financing support for the property sector, offsetting headwinds from softer July macro data and US tariff escalations. Onshore A-shares were buoyed by AI-driven tech momentum and a rally in high-dividend-yield stocks, whereas offshore Hong Kong markets underperformed, dragged by IPO supply concerns and Alibaba's HK$80 billion share placement.

China equities traded lower in September amid global de-risking, as the US Federal Reserve's first rate hike since July 2023 and a surge in oil prices amid Middle East tensions weighed on risk appetite. Softer August China macro data, continued weakness in the property and consumer sectors, and the unwinding of AI-related trades added pressure to both onshore A-shares and offshore Hong Kong markets. Domestic chip stocks also came under pressure late in the month on reports that China could permit purchases of Nvidia's new chips. Although mainland authorities announced a coordinated package of measures to support the property sector, and Hong Kong's annual Policy Address outlined initiatives aligned with China's 15th Five-Year Plan, investors remained cautious heading into the week-long National Day holiday.

Portfolio Positioning

In the month of September, the largest sector increase was Health Care from 13.97% to 15.73%. The largest sector decrease was Consumer Discretionary from 12.38% to 8.78%. Over the quarter, the Fund's exposure to Health Care had the largest increase, from 12.74% to 15.73%, followed by Industrials from 17.81% to 19.87%. The Fund's exposure to Consumer Discretionary had the largest decrease from 13.38% to 8.78%, followed by Communication Services from 10.16% to 7.71%. As of September month-end, the Fund's largest sector underweight relative to the Benchmark was Financials (8.38% vs 20.34%). The Fund's largest sector overweight relative to the Benchmark was Industrials (19.87% vs 8.56%). The Fund's top 10 positions comprised over 52% of total assets at month-end.

Outlook

Looking ahead to the final quarter, China equities offer a range of opportunities as domestic policy support, technological innovation, and corporate earnings development continue to shape the investment landscape. A sustained focus on innovation, productivity enhancement, and capital market reform could provide a supportive framework for companies with durable business models and clear competitive advantages. While the broader economic recovery remains uneven, opportunities may extend beyond the initial beneficiaries of technology investment to companies applying innovation to strengthen efficiency, expand their markets, and enhance profitability.

Further policy implementation and improving earnings visibility could support investor confidence and create room for selective re-rating. At the same time, the global interest rate backdrop and geopolitical developments may continue to generate periods of volatility. In this context, we expect company fundamentals to remain an important source of differentiation across sectors and individual stocks. A disciplined, bottom-up approach that emphasises balance-sheet strength, cash-flow resilience, and corporate governance should be well-positioned to identify attractive long-term opportunities while maintaining valuation discipline.
