Market Context

China equities were volatile in July, as early-month support from improving earnings prospects, a measured People's Bank of China (PBoC) easing stance, and offshore RMB (CNH) support measures in Hong Kong was offset by disappointing Q2 GDP, credit, and PMI data. Onshore China A-shares lagged, weighed down by a correction in domestic cyclicals and remained under pressure into month-end, even as policy rhetoric turned more supportive following the Politburo meeting and state-linked funds remained active ETF buyers. Offshore Hong Kong markets outperformed for the month, with global investors rotating capital from crowded chip-related names in South Korea and Taiwan and redeploying proceeds to Chinese internet and AI software.

Portfolio Positioning

In the month of July, the largest sector increase was Materials from 7.51% to 8.96%. The largest sector decrease was Information Technology from 27.82% to 26.98%. As of July month-end, the Fund's largest sector underweight relative to the Benchmark was Financials (7.54% vs 19.84%). The Fund's largest sector overweight relative to the Benchmark was Information Technology (26.98% vs 17.70%). The Fund's top 10 positions comprised over 54% of total assets at month-end.
