Market Context

The emerging market benchmark returned 1.35% during the month, driven primarily by US Treasuries coming down. Global markets remained volatile in October, driven initially by developments in France and geopolitical tensions that continued to drive energy prices higher, and later in the months deteriorating sentiment towards technology and dovish-leaning decisions from the Fed, ECB and BoJ. US Treasury 10-year yields reached a post-2002 high of 5.31% early in the month before declining sharply to 4.93%. Against this backdrop, emerging market spreads widened from 187bps to 208bps, while the index yield declined from 7.23% to 7.09%.

Within the broad market index, the investment-grade segment returned 2.2%, outperforming high yield at 0.6%, as the former rebounded more strongly following the significant sell-off driven by US rate volatility. At the country level, South Africa was the strongest performer, returning 3.3%, supported by its relatively low-risk, high-yielding profile. Panama followed, benefiting from the broader investment-grade rebound, improved fiscal performance and the potential reopening of a key copper mine. Lebanon was the weakest performer, returning -9.7%, as progress on banking-sector reforms stalled. Argentina also underperformed, weighed down by investor positioning and concerns over sizeable debt repayments due in 2027.

Portfolio Positioning

The main driver for the relative underperformance was our country allocation while top-down positioning and security selection contributed positively.

Within country allocation, the largest detractors were the Fund's overweight positions in Argentina and Lebanon. The overweight to Venezuela, which benefits from higher oil prices and improving trade relations with the US, was the principal contributor. The absence from high-yielding Kenya also contributed. Within security selection, there were positive contributions from positioning in Venezuela with no notable detractors.

During the month, we went further underweight in Ecuador and reduced our overweight allocation to Venezuela as part of overall beta reduction, and in the case of the latter, an extended timeline for restructuring.

We went overweight in Serbia following the strong win by the Student List in the parliamentary election, which in our view will lead to improvements in governance and relations with the EU. We added to Suriname due to favorable credit developments and added to our Indonesia euro-denominated exposures thanks to attractive valuations in our view. We closed our CDX.EM hedge following the broad spread widening.

The fund also participated in a new issue transaction from the Bahamas.

Outlook

Emerging market fundamentals remain supportive. Growth differentials relative to developed markets are near 2%, credit quality continues to improve as reflected in a broad wave of sovereign and corporate rating upgrades, and default rates remain low. And emerging markets are expected to experience a continued recovery in asset-class flows.

Though while the asset class has sound underpinnings, the short term performance ahead remains at risk from volatility in US policy, global financial markets, and geopolitical uncertainty in the Middle East.

The overall yield of the asset class is at a level that has historically been supportive for good returns on a 12-month horizon, even with emerging market spreads that have tightened toward the lower end of their historical range. And within the asset class we continue to see attractive value opportunities and potential spread compression across improving credits with clear rating-upgrade trajectories, as well as selected off-benchmark securities.
